

In the XIX century, a certain town in England won its fame as the capital of buttons. The aristocratic elite and some wealthier fashion followers from all over the world arrived here to enhance their knowledge of the buttons' subject, with the author of "The Great Expectations" among them.

Yes, Charles Dickens himself appeared in Birmingham to write an article about the button industry, as in 1851 buttons' production not only was a craftsmanship, it was also considered a genuine design that one should be writing about.

Today, more than 150 years later, this authentic buttons' design lives on. Where? Here, in the Sir B. studio.

Sir B. is incomparable fabrics matching. Rare in shades, lush in shapes. Exotic mirages. Our handmade buttons amaze by connecting simplicity with offbeat formation. It's the details that give our clothes their unique character. Ease expressing oneself. Improve the style. Give it teeth.
